TENTH ANNIVERSARY as President of Middlebury College is being observed during January by Dr. Samuel S. Stratton. Pictures above give a few glimpses of Middlebury's eleventh president during ten of the more progressive years in the history of the College. 1. Dr. Stratton receives the congratulations of Dr. Stephen A. Freeman following his inauguration on Jan. 6, 1943. President Stratton's first official act was to announce the appointment of Dr. Freeman as Vice President. 2. Gamaliel Painter's cane, symbol of football victory over the University of Vermont. 3. Faculty Conference. 4. Dr. Stratton in 1953 as he returns to his duties as President after a year's leave of absence during the course of which he was Director of the Point Four Program in Saudi Arabia. 5. REPORTING THE STUDENT SIDE OF MIDDLEBURY NEWS

Business Manager Carroll Rikert, Jr., has announced the appointment of F. Dudley Chaffee as Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds to succeed John H. Kreinheder who has accepted a similar position at Wellesley College. Mr. Chaffee was Assistant Business Manager and Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds at Wellesley College prior to accepting the Middlebury position.

Dr. Jacobus Gijbertus de Beus, Dutch Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States, spoke at the College on December 5th. . . . W. Donald Chapman, Labor Member of the British Parliament, also spoke at the College recently. . . . Vermont's Senator Ralph E. Flanders, speaking in the McCullough Gymnasium, discussed the nation's Korean War and corruption problems.

Listed among speakers at Sunday vesper services in Mead Chapel this fall were: Dr. Chad Walsh, Beloit College; The Reverend Edward S. Hickcox, Hartford, Conn.; The Reverend Howard Rubendall, Headmaster of the Mount Hermon School; Rabbi Judah Cahn, Lawrence, N. Y.; The Reverend Bradford S. Abernethy of Rutgers University; and The Reverend Paul L. Lehmann of Princeton Theological Seminary.

Orders are now being accepted for the 1953 Kaleidoscope—Middlebury's excellent yearbook. You may order your copy now by sending a check for $5.50 (plus twenty-five cents for mailing) to: Miss Gail Wren, Kaleidoscope Assistant Business Manager, Pearsons Hall, Middlebury College, Middlebury, Vermont. Please make checks payable to—1953 Kaleidoscope.

The College Community Chest drive was a success this year as $2,538.16 was received in donations from students, faculty and staff. This sum is more than was collected in the Chest Drives of 1950 and 1951. Sixty-eight per cent of the students contributed.

Carey T. Smith, '54, has been elected Captain of the 1953 football team. Six feet tall and weighing 200 pounds, Carey played an important role in Middlebury's 19-13 win over the University of Vermont football team this fall.

As a result of the first semester 1952 Rushing Program, 158 freshmen, four sophomores, three transfer students, and four veterans have been pledged by the College's nine fraternities. . . . Fraternities at Middlebury are spreading their "Help Week" work over a period of several weeks this year, so that important work can be done when it is most needed. Each fraternity will supply the needed labor force as the Interfraternity Council makes assignments. Included among some of the work plans are: renovation work at the Sheldon Museum, disassembling the tower on Chipman Hill which fell in the hurricane and cut brush and stumps in that area, construction of picnic areas on the west side of Chipman Hill and at the half-way point and work on Village skating rinks.

Work was completed in early December on the installation of a new eight-inch pipeline for the Village water system which runs across the Middlebury campus. The College undertook the expense of this project with Village approval in order to insure adequate facilities for handling any future water supplies. Formerly, an eight-inch line went across the upper campus from South Main Street and ended in front of Pearsons Hall with four-inch piping carrying the rest of the way. The new project completes the loop, bringing the eight-inch line down in front of the Chateau, across the lawns of the new Battell dormitories, across College Street, and then parallel with Old Chapel road. Three thousand feet of pipe were used in the installation. Progress was slowed when a ledge in back of Old Chapel had to be blasted away. Some blasting was necessary to dig the trench across the women's athletic field.

The second payment of Middlebury's share of the estate of Mrs. Hetty Green Wilks, an amount totaling $817,900, has been deposited in the College account. The first payment, received last spring amounted to $1,645,391.82; the total amount received from the legacy now amounts to $2,463,291.82. Although income from the amount received last spring has already been applied to faculty and administration salary increases, for the present these funds will be added to the college endowment. No decision has been made in regard to the further utilization of the income. The second payment is the final one to be received from the estate except for a small residual payment which may not be made for a year or more.

The call letters of Middlebury's student radio station have been changed from WMCRS to WRMC. The College station is a member of the Intercollegiate Broadcasting System. . . . William L. Smith, '53, and Julie Heilborn, '54, are the co-chairmen in charge of arrangements for the Annual Winter Carnival scheduled for February 19-20-21.

Verne J. Goodwin, '53, has been awarded the annual Dutton Fellowship. This fellowship provides a year's post-graduate study at an approved institution in an English-speaking country outside the United States or in France or the Netherlands. Basis of the award is similar to that of Rhodes Scholarships. High academic achievement, college leadership, and interest in outdoor sports and life are the factors considered. The Dutton Fellowship was established in 1926 by the Hon. Redfield Proctor, former governor of Vermont and a member of the College's board of trustees and provides $2500. for a Middlebury senior man.

Goodwin is an economics major and is president of the Men's Undergraduate Association. He was co-captain of the Panther ski team last winter and also was a member of the U.S. Olympic ski team. He plans to study economics and philosophy at the University of Cambridge in England and eventually earn his Doctorate.

John W. Tremaine, '55, has been elected captain of the Middlebury cross country team for 1953. Cross country letters were awarded to Roger B. May, '53; Tremaine; Stanley D. Hayward, '56; Brooks G. Dodd, '55; Malcolm D. McConnell, '54; Hull P. Maynard, Jr., '56; and Ben H. Walcott, '54.

Stanley P. Holt, '54, has been named new commodore of the Middlebury Yacht Club.

A Long Road Back

By JEAN DOUGLAS ANDREW '37

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO a member of the Class of 1937 left Middlebury without a degree, having attended the college only a year. He has not returned to the campus since. However, this class member has proved to be an outstanding example of loyalty to and interest in Middlebury, as well as a strong and valid argument for the program of international exchange students in our colleges.

Hans W. Roepke came to Midd in the fall of 1936 from his home in Berlin from the University of Berlin, as a German exchange student. We had seen several other exchange students from Germany in the years previous. These others had conditioned us to expect a rather aloof, critical and not too silent propagandist for the new Nazi regime. But we had not bargained with Hans, as we soon learned. In a very few months this fellow had more than mastered the American idiom, ping pong, the Big Apple, bridge and the easy friendliness of our campus. He knew us all, and we knew him. He struggled through Constitutional Law and Freshman mixers—assuredly enjoying both. We liked him, and he obviously liked us. By the time spring came, we realized that this particular class member would not be very close to us in the years ahead. But none of us had any idea how far away from us he would go in the years between, and how close that year in America would remain in his mind, and how it would help him to build a new life many years later.

Jean Douglas Andrew, '37, and Hans Roepke, '37

In the war years as a member of the Armed Forces and in eleven years of marriage to an Army man, I think I have heard many remarkable and heartrending war stories. I do not think any can match this story of Hans and Gisela and Kirsten Roepke. After learning it from them in bits and pieces and snatches during our several reunions in Germany in 1952, I am glad to reconstruct it.

Hans returned to the University of Berlin in 1937 to resume studies for his history degree. His family were prominent in academic circles there. Presumably had life been different in Europe in 1939, when he received his degree, he would have taught history or been a journalist, perhaps. However, within two days of the award of the degree, he was called into active military service with the Deutsch Wehrmacht.

Except for his one year of proscribed military duty obligatory to all German youth at that time, Hans had had no connection with the military until then. As Hitler marched into Poland, the German Army of the war years was being shaped rapidly. One minor cog was young Roepke, who soon became an officer in the Field Artillery. This is no surprise to those who know his fine mind and ability to get along with anybody, anywhere. He would never stay long in the rear rank.

Early in the war he was stationed in a kaserne near Berlin, as most German cities have their garrisons locally manned. Hans met and in May, 1941 married an unusually attractive, intelligent and interesting girl named Gisela. Her home was Frankfurt, and her education was taken in Munich, but Gisela is as typically the cosmopolitan Berliner as her husband. She is easily the most attractive German woman whom I have met.

The height of the German advance into Russia following the invasion of June, 1941 found Hans a Captain in command of a battery that had penetrated as far as Kuban in the Caucasus. In the early months of this drive, the people of Russia through whose lands the German Army had thrust were friendly and helpful. As German bureaucracy increased, and as the military successes waned, this attitude changed completely. Hans reports that during these early months he was one of a group of five officers and men who would travel regularly 1000 kilometers, with no weapons or guard except themselves and what they had, back to the rear echelon for replacements.

JEAN DOUGLAS ANDREW '37, wife of Major George S. Andrew Jr. is presently living in Amberg, Germany where her husband is Executive Officer of a Tank Battalion in the 2nd U.S. Armored Cavalry Regiment, on Iron Curtain border patrol. Arriving in Germany early this year, she sent to the Alumni Office for the current address of Hans Roepke '37. They have gotten together several times, introducing their families to each other, enjoying talk of old times at Middlebury, wartime experiences, current problems in Germany and future hopes to go to America. Out of this renewed friendship has come the article "A Long Road Back."

Mrs. Andrew has served as Secretary to the Hon. George D. Aiken as Governor of Vermont and U.S. Senator, an editorial staff member of LIFE Magazine, an officer in the WAVES during World War II and Public Relations Assistant to the Episcopal Diocese of Connecticut. She is the mother of two children and a free lance writer when not occupied keeping up with the Army man in the family. At Middlebury, where she was graduated as Valedictorian of the Class of 1937, she was a member of Delta Delta Delta and Phi Beta Kappa. Mrs. Andrew has served as Class Secretary.

Early in their marriage Hans and Gisela had a little daughter killed in an air raid in Berlin. She was only four weeks old. Her father never saw her except in a very dim, blurred picture. Gisela spent the war years in her adopted city of Berlin. In April, 1945 Hans came home on leave. On the way back to rejoin his outfit east of Vienna by now, the destruction, confusion and despair he had seen everywhere he had been made him realize that the end was very, very near.

With his typical abandon, common to Berliners and Americans, he dispensed with the formalities of returning to his unit to await the inevitable surrender. Vienna was under siege by the Russians as he got there. Why head for the Russians when the Americans were coming in from the other direction, and coming fast?

As Hans says, "I discharged myself from the Army and took off." When I first heard this part of the story I had visions of our hero plodding down the road in a dismal column of refugees. That shows just how wrong even those who know Hans can be about his ability to cope with the situation. Still in uniform, he attached himself to a column of wealthy refugees from Hungary and managed to find a place in their caravan of automobiles that followed the Danube to Linz and then headed south and west across Austria.

Somewhere along the line Hans managed to find civilian clothes of a sort. Separating from the group, he made his way on foot to meet the American Army. He had absolutely no papers of identification by this time. In a country where thousands were seeking to lose old and unsavory identities, this was hazardous. But nothing was hazardous compared to going in the direction of the Russians in those days, or now for that matter.

He encountered the American Fourth Armored Division in Landshtut, Bavaria. His ability to be a convincing pro-American gave him an opportunity to work for food and lodging as an interpreter for the American Army, and gave him papers, of a sort. It saved him from prison camp.

A war-time meeting in Berlin with an important American Red Cross official gave him an excuse to travel about, under the guise of attempting to locate this person who was sufficiently well known to give Hans a little leeway, which was all that he needed to operate.

During this time all he knew of his wife was that Berlin had fallen to the Russians, and that Gisela was expecting a child that month.

In discussing this, we mentioned to Hans how terribly hard it must have been to wonder if the other was even alive, let alone well and safe. Hans gave an answer that would not occur to the average American who has not had to live with war in his homeland. He said, "Yes, it was very hard. But all of Europe was living that way. We were not alone in our worry."

Early in 1946 Hans decided that the only way to find Gisela was to seek her father in Frankfurt, about 500 miles away, completely across Germany. Hitchhiking with thousands of others on the same sort of mission on the Autobahn, and sleeping wherever he could, Hans had reached Darmstadt, on the outskirts of Frankfurt. He was walking along the autobahn toward a group of three American cars that were stopped. The occupants were eating in a Red Cross snack bar, and were obviously people of importance. As he drew near, he recognized, and what is more improbable, was recognized by one of the Americans. It was the same Red Cross official he had tried to locate earlier. The official was on a three day inspection visit to Germany. He was able to do little for Hans in Frankfurt, but the enormity of the coincidence can hardly be matched.

When Hans returned to the area of Frankfurt, he found his wife's father and news, indeed. As the Russians drew closer to Berlin, Gisela took her bicycle and headed for Denmark, eight and a half months pregnant. It is hard to decide whether she was foolish or courageous, but she, too, had her preferences for the West. Almost as soon as she crossed the Danish border, she gave birth, in a farmhouse, to a daughter. The farm people there were so good to her then, and kept her for two weeks before they had to turn her over to a refugee camp, that this little Roepke [Continued on page 15]

Economics at Middlebury College

By PROFESSOR J. STUART PRENTICE

AMERICAN indifference to Economics before 1860 was as widespread as it was understandable. We had not fought Napoleon for a quarter of a century, nor had we suffered from the economic upheavals that Europe had experienced after Waterloo—upheavals that had created a Malthus, a Ricardo and a dozen other distinguished economists. With a continent to occupy, it had seemed as if we could make no serious economic mistakes. Why then should Americans study Economics, especially as, by 1840, many serious folk at home and abroad had begun to call its teachings in question?

The 1840's were indeed the age in which everyone felt capable of writing on Economics, and many were very sure that existing treatises were not worthy of serious study. In France, Utopian Socialists were attacking Economics from a dozen different points of view, and Bastiat was replying with his devastatingly amusing Petition of the Candlemakers. In Belgium Marx and Engels were publishing the Communist Manifesto. In England Carlyle was sneering at Economics as the "dismal science"; and in America Amasa Walker was writing in his Economics treatise, Science of Wealth (that was the Middlebury text used by President Kitchell.): "Although desirable that the instructor should be familiar with the subject himself, it is by no means indispensable."

Small wonder, then, that such Economics as was taught in this country prior to 1860 should be in a one semester course, and given by clergymen who were specialists in other fields. But, even so, Economics at Middlebury for forty years had a unique distinction. From 1840 to 1866 President Larabee taught the course, and for seventeen of these years he employed a text written by President Wayland of Brown University. From 1866 to 1873 President Kitchell continued to lend special distinction to this course. Then after a lapse of seven years President Hamlin in 1880 resumed the administration of the one capsule dose of Economics and taught it until he resigned in 1887. Thus, after special supervision by the President of the College from 1840 to 1887, Economics was considered by President Brainard to have reached a stage of development when it might be entrusted to lesser hands.

The Civil War created for the United States gigantic problems such as Europe had faced after a quarter century of Napoleon. Small wonder, then, that it also created for us the first group of able economists, and the first serious emphasis on colleges of Economics. The first chair in "Political Economy" was established at Williams College in 1865, and Harvard followed in 1871. Meantime, in 1866 Harvey Kitchell had been installed at Middlebury as President. Whether he had learned of the recently established professorship at Williams the story does not record. But the year after his inauguration, 1867, the title of his chair was changed to read, "Professor of Political Economy and International Law." However, lest someone boast that we thus antedate proud Harvard by four years, and are unwilling to speak to the Lowells, let us acknowledge at once that President Kitchell faithfully followed the tradition established by his predecessor of offering but a one-term course in the fourth year, the most notable change being the adoption of Amasa Walker's text from which the quotation was made above. Indeed, when Cyrus Hamlin became President in 1880 he also became "Professor of Ethics and Political Science," completely extinguishing any hope of glory that Dr. Kitchell might have sought for Middlebury.

Eighteen eighty-seven was a year of change for Middlebury. Ezra Brainard became President and Granville Yager joined the faculty as "Professor of Psychology, Ethics and Economics." Thus with him we see the older term "Political Economy" being replaced by the familiar expression "Economics." It is perhaps of interest to note that his curriculum for his students was as follows: Freshmen and Sophomore, "Civics and History of Civilization"; Juniors, "Economics," (Winter term only); Seniors "Constitutional and International Law."

In 1890 the peripatetic orphan course found itself in the "Department of History and Political Science." In 1894, after fifty-four years of infancy, Economics grew to a two-term course, and so continued until in 1908 when Dr. Thomas became President. There is probably a connection between his coming to Middlebury and the sudden mushrooming of Economics. At any event, at the time of Dr. Thomas' assumption of the Presidency, Walter Eugene Howard was chairman of the Department of History and also chairman of the separate Department of Political and Social Science, and taught courses in both departments. In his spare time he was Dean of the College. That was in 1908. In 1911 John Allen Morgan was added to the Department of Political and Social Science, as "Assistant Professor of Political Economy." As such he began in that year to offer new courses in Railway Transportation, Money and Banking and Public Finance. In that year too he taught Sociology on the side. In 1913 Professor Howard left Middlebury and Professor Morgan [Continued on page 15]

Friends In Need

By ROBERT E. REUMAN, '45

DOWN in the southwest corner of Germany, not far from Switzerland and France, the Rhine River moves with solemn might through a level plain gouged out by centuries of patient flow. Into this plain, out of the north, probe the fir-backed fingers of the mountainous Black Forest. These wooded mountains are much like the Green Mountains of Vermont—mature, soft, covered with lovely conifer and deciduous forests, and occasionally revealing to the wanderer a lovely vista over graceful valleys, gentle slopes and cathedral pines. Then, down where the plain begins between the spreading fingers of the slopes, one finds a town. Actually it is a city of 100,000 people, physically different from Middlebury, and yet it has the “feel” of a village rather than a city, and more particularly the feel of Middlebury. Lovely, placid villages set in graceful mountains have that similitude—a feeling of divine quietude, as if time were an evanescent ripple along the edges of reality, but the reality is here and it moves with grace, slowly, when it moves at all.

Spring brings greenery and flowers—Rhododendrons, Azaleas, and little spots of color in the hills. Summer is warm and lassitudinous, gradually giving way to glorious displays of autumn color. In Winter the snow falls, not in blizzards, but gently, while students and townsfolk trudge off to the hills, skis over their shoulders and packs on their backs. Quietly they go, with a smile. Horses pull carts through the streets. Street lights at night illumine picturesque old towers and homes out of a rococo past. Peace on earth, good will to men.

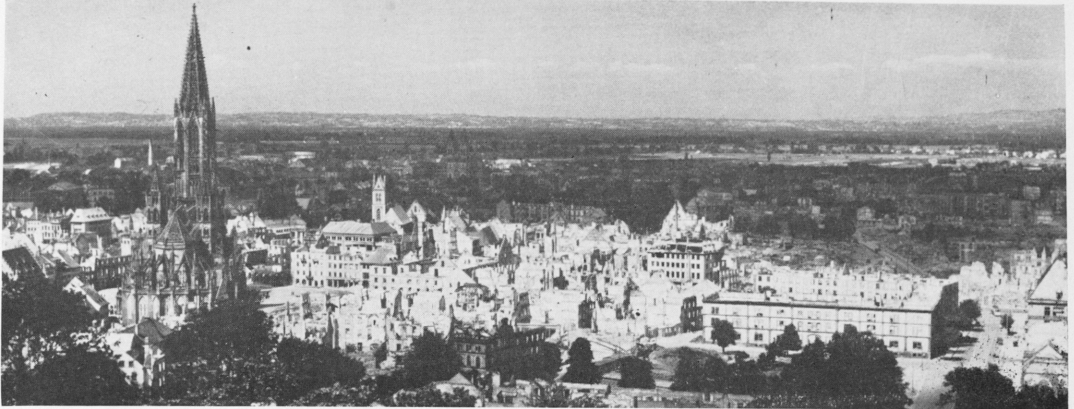

Robert E. Reuman, '45, (with pipe) pauses in front of Student House, Freiburg, with a group of German students engaged in preparing the Student House for the opening of the University of Freiburg.

But the peace has been shattered. Germany has been blasted by a long and cruel war. Veterans in their twenties and thirties are still working through the university. Some travel in push carts, many lack an arm or swing a stiff leg awkwardly. A prosthesis never can be more than a substitute. Freiburg, the peaceful, the residential city, was bombed once, towards the end of the war. They call it “saturation bombing.” Twenty minutes. Of Hell. A fifth of the town flattened. Thousands of people dying in agony. Something in everybody, the world over, died that day. And other days . . .

In 1952 the bombed areas are still tombs: cold, silent, piles of rubble. There are tombs in men's minds also. Mental and physical—the dust lies heavy on the rubble. But here and there a sprout has come up, green and fresh. A recently plastered building, bearing the date 1565 in unweathered letters, rises out of the surrounding mounds of chipped blocks, bricks, twisted girders—and flatness. Trade goes on in plywood stores—like the cheap scrap growth that springs up in a forest after the virgin timber lies blasted by raging fires. Students go to classes, past ruins, in rooms with great cracks down the walls. Existence goes on, and life comes again.

Shortly after the “recent international unpleasantness”, as Paul Arthur Schilpp euphemistically designated the last war, before shrubs had grown up in the ruins, friends came to help those people in need. They brought food and clothing, because there was not enough. These were Friends, otherwise known as Quakers. They do not like the word “help”—the need for “help” is a bottomless pit and it creates something undesirable in both the giver and the receiver—they came instead to share with and to work alongside those who had seen greater sorrow and had less to work with than they. They came bearing gifts to the vanquished, but less the gifts of things and more the gift of self. They left behind them "begeistert" individuals.

The motivation of these Friends, though many of them were only friends, was simple. They did not come to convert, for they do not proselytise even among their own people. They did not come to criticise or advise. They came out of their own inner need, a voice that told them you cannot digest your meat when someone else has none. If someone else is in prison or enslaved, the voice said, then you too are not free. If someone else lacks the opportunity that you enjoy, then all is not well. Somewhere they had heard that all men are brothers. They believed that profound statement and acted according to that belief. It was not a concern of theirs if the one enslaved or in need was a Nazi, a fascist, a communist, colored or colorless, worshiping strange gods or none at all. One should quench the thirst of his brother, if he thirsteth. That is enough. That was their concern. They carried this concern with them to the ends of the earth.

It all began several hundred years ago when the Society of Friends started in England under the leadership of George Fox. The early Friends and their descendants were active in all areas of social tension and unrest, seeking to work in areas of tension to improve the lot of the oppressed, the needy and the neglected. They were active in prison and penal reform, were among the first of those that wrought the transformation of mental hospitals from prisons of "bedlam" to places of medical treatment, and were active in securing beneficial social and labor legislation. In the States they were in the vanguard of those who renounced their slave-holding rights and pressed for emancipation. Starting with the belief that there was something of God in every man, this characteristic being both man's essential and highest quality, the conclusion easily followed that a Friend must not only not violate this element of divinity in the spirit or body of another, but must actively seek to allow the possibility of divinity in other men to reach its greatest actualization. Such a person would obviously be led into the struggle against slavery in all its forms, and particularly the slavery to the institution of war. Thus, the "peace testimony" of the Friends, expressed in manifold resistive and constructive channels.

Since the first World War the vehicle of the social concern of most Friends in the United States, and the far more numerous people who are not Friends but share these concerns, has been the American Friends Service Committee (AFSC), with headquarters in Philadelphia. The work of the AFSC has been world wide, and has received commensurate recognition, one of the most recent being the award of the Nobel Peace Prize.

The work is varied, although always arising out of the basic concern. Freiburg and many other places in Europe have seen Quaker relief teams, meeting the basic needs of food, clothing and shelter and, at the same time, friendly good will and understanding. Now in Freiburg, instead of relief work, the need for this having passed, there is a student house which gives students a place to study in warmth and with good light; where books, magazines and newspapers [Continued on page 16]

David B. Lawton, '32, has been named Manager of the new twenty-five million dollar transformer plant the General Electric Company has announced it will build in Rome, Georgia.

In 1947, Mr. Lawton was sent to Pittsfield, Mass., as Superintendent of the Distribution Transformer Manufacturing Division. Last fall he was appointed Assistant Manager of Manufacturing in that Division.

Mr. Lawton was transferred from Schenectady in 1942 and sent to the General Electric plant in Fort Edward, N. Y., as General Foreman of the plant. In 1944 he was named Assistant Superintendent at Fort Edward; in 1945, Superintendent, and in 1946, Manager at Fort Edward.

He received the GE Coffin award in 1944 for work on redesigning the winding and assembling of coils in the Selsyn motors, thereby increasing the output of the Fort Edward plant for production in World War II.

When he was at the Fort Edward plant, Mr. Lawton served as a member

The Reverend James C. McLeod, '26, has been named Dean of Students at Northwestern University. Rev. McLeod, a former Marine Corps Chaplain, has been Chaplain at Northwestern since July of 1946.

Rev. McLeod, as Dean of Students, directs all matters pertaining to student life. His staff includes the Dean of Men and the various counselors under him; the Dean of Women, all of her resident counselors plus house mothers; and the Director of Student Activities with his assistants and staff.

HILDA W. GOLLNICK, '22

Mrs. Gollnick (Hilda Woodruff, '22) has been a resident of Brisbane, Australia for the past twenty years. She is the recent recipient of two honors seldom received by Americans. They are—honorary membership in the Victoria League and election to the Presidency of the Lyceum Club.

The Lyceum Club is a British Empire woman's organization, the membership of which is drawn from college and university graduates, lawyers, doctors, artists, writers and other women who have rendered public service. Mrs.

Gollnick is the first American to be elected president of the Australian branch of the Lyceum Club which has its headquarters in London.

The Victoria League is also a British women's group. The main purpose of this organization is the fostering of closer ties with England and the preservation of English tradition.

Mrs. Gollnick is married to a Middlebury graduate and has a son in the sophomore year at the College.

The Alumni shown in this picture met partly by coincidence and partly by plan at Innsbruck, Austria. A day of skiing featured the reunion of these Middlebury graduates now working or studying in Europe. A LONG ROAD BACK girl is named Kirsten, for the daughter of the Danish family who befriended them. For two years Gisela kept Kirsten and herself alive in a DP camp in Denmark, living largely on potatoes and milk. It is hard to see Kirsten today, healthy and full of energy and appreciate how handicapped her early years were.

Back in Frankfurt, Hans first worked for the Americans in Special Services, acting as English speaking Master of Ceremonies for soldier shows. Hard as it was, I am sure Hans managed to be funny in this role. But not funny was his salary. His side splitting efforts earned just enough marks a month to buy one pound of butter and that is all, so uncontrolled was the inflation at that time.

Even though he couldn't very well feed his family, news finally came that his wife and daughter were being released from the camp and were coming to join him, after two and a half years of separation. That night he was awakened from his sleep at one-thirty in the morning. Three American Counter-Intelligence agents had come to arrest him. That day he had talked on the street to a casual acquaintance whom he had not seen since Berlin days early in the war. This man happened to be under strictest surveillance. All people talking with him were arrested. Because the proof of his identity, statements and reliability had to come from Berlin and America, and because of his irregular self-discharge from the Army, questioning and verification took four months, which Hans spent in solitary confinement—in an American prison camp. He had headed in 1945 for the Americans, rather than go to a Russian or a German prison camp, and found himself in an American one instead in 1947.

However, he was treated fairly. As it became obvious that he was innocent and not anti-American, Gisela and Kirsten were brought for a reunion, the first German family to be admitted. This added six months of separation, at the hands of the Americans, has amazingly evoked no bitterness on the part of either of them. They both realize all too well how different their treatment was from what it would have been from any other country. Said Hans of this, "Because of the fair treatment I received, I became an American in an American prison camp."

The year 1948 brought currency reform to the Western Zone of Germany and the beginning of a new life for the Ropke's, at last a family. Hans worked first for the Historical Division of the War Department, HICOG and finally for one of the American insurance companies doing business with American personnel in Germany. In order to obtain housing, a prime scarcity still, they act as chaperones for the American Teen-Age Club in Frankfurt, and live on the third floor of the building that houses the club. In order to carry out her considerable share of this job, Gisela has learned excellent English. Together they are teaching seven year old Kirsten who is now a whiz at Little Black Sambo and Happy Birthday to You.

This is the type of German that all of us wish would stay in Germany to rebuild Germany along the democratic lines so greatly needed. They are already displaced from their Berlin home. We cannot blame the Ropke's for trying to come to America, and we want to do everything we can to help them find a completely new life in our country. They deserve it. That one year as an exchange student at Middlebury instilled a sense of American values and fairness into one college student that has been strong enough to draw him and his family, given the proper opportunity, back to America. Middlebury can well pause and be proud of its part in this story.

ECONOMICS AT MIDDLEBURY

became Chairman of the separate Department of Political and Social Science. Professor Morgan at once divested himself of the responsibility of teaching Sociology and added to his offerings new courses in Corporation Finance, Labor, and History of Economics.

When President Moody assumed office in 1921, his program included a strengthening of the quality of instruction at Middlebury. With this end in view he brought to the College in 1925 a group of able young instructors through whom he hoped to achieve this end. Among the members of this notable group who came to Middlebury was Harry M. Fife, later head of the Department.

In 1926 Economics, which for no less than eighty-six years had been attached to many departments as an extra, often unacknowledged by title, at last reached maturity. A separate Department of Economics was established, with Professor Fife at its head. Despite the rigor of his requirements, students increasingly came to major in Economics until at the time of his death in 1950 the Department had grown, in point of student majors, into one of the largest on the campus.

The basic courses today remain as instituted in 1913. Many changes have been made. The course in Transportation has disappeared, and five courses have been added to meet needs that a rapidly growing country and changing college requirements dictated. Twice, however, the Department has made comprehensive surveys of its program. The first study in 1930 resulted in some shifting of emphasis, and a clearer realization that there were two broad groups of students majoring in Economics. It was laid down as a policy that those who were planning to go to a school of business or to a graduate school of Economics after graduation, should be required to take at Middlebury all the courses in Theory available. Those, however, who planned to go directly into business would be best advised to take here the courses we offered in Business Economics.

In 1950 a second careful study was made and it seemed best to regularize the twenty-year-old procedure by formally setting up a second major in "Business Economics." It cannot, however, be too clearly stated that the main distinction between the Economics Department and several others at Middlebury is that the former has placed in the catalogue two majors whereas others, with differing situations in mind, have found it best to serve similar purposes by advising procedures alone.

The Economics Department has grown with the years, and this year's sophomore class embraces thirty-three per cent more majors (fifty-six students). To meet our growing and changing needs the personnel of the department has changed. With the death of Professor Fife early in 1950, Professor J. Stuart Prentice who had been on the faculty since 1931, became chairman of the department. The same year Dr. David K. Smith was brought to Middlebury to aid in the direction of the Business Economics major. He possesses an M.B.A. and a Ph.D., the latter a Harvard degree in Economics. He is ideally suited therefore to meet our needs because his main interest is Economic Theory, but his training enables him to apply it very effectively to business situations. In 1950, also, Robert M. Klein came from the Graduate School at Syracuse University, with his wit and incisiveness to further our advanced courses in economic theory. This year Edward E. LeClair has come to Middlebury with his enthusiasm for Economic Anthropology, and his refreshingly new slants on Economics generally. But, though generations of students and instructors come and go, we to whom the torch of knowledge in the field of Economics has been handed from the early clergymen who were Presidents and instructors in Economics, still seek as best we may, to give our generation of students the same passion and capacity to analyse and understand that which will contribute most to the worth and dignity of man.

from different countries are available; where students can meet for discussions, seminars, group activities and a bit of recreation; and, perhaps more, where students can practice group leadership and experiment in ways of creating valuable student community life. Most American students take these privileges for granted. Many German students have little idea of these possibilities. If the Quaker Student House can show there is a value in such things, and can show how Germans themselves can solve these needs, it will be time to move on to new locations and new problems.

Multiply this student house by others in Germany and elsewhere. Add Neighborhood Centers and International Centers, whose focus is slightly different as indicated by the name, but whose approach is much the same. Consider the work with refugees, in some cases helping them relocate, in some helping them to make the interim years more agreeable and profitable, in some cases working together to create homes and farms. In Europe, the Near East, India, this work goes on, here on a small scale, in another place on a large scale. In India there is now a program of social and technical assistance. In China the work included transportation of medical supplies, rehabilitation of war-torn hospitals, the establishment of clinics and mobile medical teams. This work was brought to a close in 1950. In many countries summer and year-around "work camps" have become famous—students and ordinary folk from different lands pitch in, volunteering their time, building together a school, a playground, a hospital, a cooperative village. Seminars draw qualified leaders to discuss with students problems of international adjustments, racial relations, industrial conditions, etc.

The United States itself has not been free from the invasion of these workers for peace. Seminar groups meet in various cities. Work is done in mental hospitals, seeking to raise the level of institutional care. Racial maladjustments are studied and ways explored to reduce racial misunderstanding and invidious discrimination. The same sort of work is being done in industrial areas. It would take a book to catalogue all the facets of this activity.

You may ask who the people are who do this work. The basic approach is to take for a few years those people who are "concerned", whether Quaker or not. Essentially they contribute a summer, or a week-end, or a few years of their life to work on these projects. AFSC overseas appointees serve on a maintenance basis. Certainly it is no method of piling up a bank balance in a hurry. Some are like my wife and me. Dorothy is a recent college graduate, brought up in the home of a visionary Christian minister. After being drafted out of Middlebury, I was a conscientious objector during the war, serving for three years in reforestation projects, fighting forest fires in Oregon, working as an attendant on the "active" ward of a large mental hospital while acting as a guinea pig in medical experiments, in addition later serving a term in prison. After the war followed three years of university teaching and a doctorate in philosophy. We were married in 1949, made the break with customary routine, packed away the wedding cake and gifts (in different places) and a week later were on the way to China. Then came a year and a half in Communist China patching sores, treating trachoma, and fighting dysentery, scabies and malaria in a clinic in Chungking. Our clientele was not exactly wealthy. They were peasants, clothed in patched garments, working long and diligently under distressing conditions, often with no money to their name but suffering from several diseases simultaneously. Later we did administrative work in Shanghai. Now we are working in the student center in Freiburg, Germany. A year or so hence we will be looking for ivy walls in the States. I think we will not forget this experience; but having spent full time in this sort of project for a few years we will then return to a more normal sort of life. Hopefully, there will be someone to take our place.

The money that supports the AFSC comes from people who are interested in contributing to the same objectives. One person gives a week-end or a year of time, another gives a dollar or two—they and others give basically of themselves to share with others in working toward a world in which there will no longer be an occasion for war.

Kennetha McKinley, '52, and H. Frederick Bedford following their wedding at Middlebury. Mr. Bedford is the son of H. Ward Bedford of the College's Music Dept.
